This document breaks the VSL into 13 numbered concepts. For each one you get: the psychology (what that moment does inside the viewer's head), the fix (what changes in the edit or on camera), and the script (the exact final wording, assembled from the strongest recorded takes plus the few new lines that still need to be filmed). The raw shoot is strong — roughly 80% of a high-performing VSL is already in the can. The fixes below target the 20% that carries most of the conversion weight: the hook, the claims, the third objection, and the close.

The three rules of this edit

1. Every highlighted claim must match, everywhere. The raw footage contains three different revenue claims. One inconsistent number costs more trust than a smaller, verifiable number earns — and this audience is primed skeptical. Lock ONE claim set with Dez (numbers he can screenshot) and use it in every yellow-highlighted spot.
2. Results get receipts. Wherever green appears, slow the pacing and put proof on screen — real dashboard, real orders, real packing. Spoken claims assert; screenshots convince.
3. One CTA, hit twice, never diluted. The only action in this video is: application below, book a call. Red marks every CTA beat. Nothing else gets asked of the viewer at any point.

Highlight legend

Yellow — must-match claim	The same figure must appear in every yellow spot. Verify before publish.
Green — results / proof moment	Emphasize in delivery and pair with on-screen receipts.
Red — call to action	The booking ask. Full energy, no new information after it.
Blue italic — pickup line	Not in the current footage. Dez records these in one short session (shot list on the last page).

1. The Hook — Stop the Scroll, Open the Gap

● PICKUP REQUIRED — new line(s) must be recorded

THE PSYCHOLOGY

The first ten seconds are a filter, not an introduction. A cold viewer runs one subconscious check: is this about me, and is this real? A hook earns the next minute by opening a loop — a gap between where the viewer is and where the speaker is — that the brain itches to close (unfinished ideas hold attention far better than finished ones). The recorded hook argues against a “luck” accusation nobody made, and its “that gap” line references a gap that was never set up — so the loop never opens.

THE FIX

Replace the hook entirely with the line below. It leads with the one contradiction Dez actually owns — a six-figure brand run from a storage unit with AI as the whole marketing team — which sets up “the gap” honestly and plants the mechanism in the first breath.

THE SCRIPT

“I run a multiple six-figure e-commerce brand out of this storage unit — and my entire marketing team is AI. Two years ago, I was stuck at zero, guessing just like everybody else. And the gap between those two versions of me is exactly what this video is about.”

Production note: Film inside the storage unit, inventory visible over his shoulder. This must visually match Concept 10 so the hook's promise pays off on screen.

2. The Callout — “That's Me” Recognition

● KEEP — strongest recorded takes, use as is

THE PSYCHOLOGY

Listing the viewer's exact failed attempts — the random dropship product, the store that got no sales, the posting streak that got no views — triggers self-recognition. The more specific the miss, the more the viewer feels diagnosed rather than pitched. And a person who can name your problem precisely is presumed to have the cure: that presumption is what buys the next three minutes.

THE SCRIPT

“You probably tried this yourself. You probably tried to drop ship some random product. You probably built a store, threw some products on there, kinda just hoping it'd work, but didn't get any sales. Or you maybe even started posting content consistently, but still were getting no views.”

3. Self-Doubt & The Turn

● EDIT FIX — solvable at the desk, no new filming

THE PSYCHOLOGY

Naming the viewer's private question — “does this even work, or is it me?” — moves the video from marketing to confession; it is the most intimate line in the script. Answering it immediately (“I'm here to tell you that it is”) relieves the tension and quietly transfers the blame off the viewer. People buy from the person who absolves them, because absolution earns the right to prescribe.

THE FIX

Use the final two takes. The “I'm not here to just tell it as a story” thought never completes in any take — bridge with a hard cut straight into “I made every single one of those mistakes.”

THE SCRIPT

“And I just know some point in that journey, you probably started to question yourself, like, ‘Does this work, or is this for me?’ And I'm here to tell you that it is — because I made every single one of those mistakes. I spent so much time and so much money down the drain, because I didn't know what I was doing.”

4. Credibility Intro — The Claims Lock

● EDIT FIX — solvable at the desk, no new filming

THE PSYCHOLOGY

This is the “why should I listen to you” moment — and credibility is built on the consistency of a claim, not its size. This avatar has been burned by gurus before; they are actively scanning for the lie. One contradictory number confirms their suspicion and un-sells everything that follows. A smaller number stated identically three times beats a bigger number stated two different ways.

THE FIX

The raw footage contains three different claim levels ($20K+ since January, multiple six figures this year, $10K vs. tens of thousands per product). Sit with Dez, pick the ONE set he can screenshot, and use it verbatim in every yellow spot in this document — hook, intro, mirrors line, and all on-screen text.

THE SCRIPT

“My name is Dez. I run a brand called Crib Essentials, and just this year alone, we've done multiple six figures while also having specific products that brought us multiple tens of thousands of dollars.” [Hold a beat — put the receipt on screen here: the real dashboard, not a motion graphic.]

5. The AI Reveal — The Unique Mechanism

● KEEP — strongest recorded takes, use as is

THE PSYCHOLOGY

Every burned buyer believes “the normal way didn't work for me.” A new mechanism gives them permission to believe again without admitting personal failure — it wasn't them, it was the method. And “people never believe me when I say it” adds a curiosity spike while pre-framing the skeptics: doubt is expected, so doubt stops being a reason to leave.

THE SCRIPT

“And the one part that people never believe me when I say is that I'm using AI to actually help me run my business — and it's the reason why I'm making so much money with my business.”

6. Past Pain → “Just Me and AI”

● KEEP — strongest recorded takes, use as is

THE PSYCHOLOGY

The failures here are sensory and specific — products mailed to influencers who ghosted, an Airbnb rented for a shoot that flopped, weeks of content for nothing. Specificity is proof of experience. Then the contrast lands: hours of work compressed into seconds. “It's just me and AI” is the identity line of the entire VSL — five words that carry the mechanism, the differentiation, and the biggest hidden objection (“I don't have a team”) at once. His repetition of it across takes is an instinct, not a flub — keep it recurring.

THE FIX

None — these are his most natural takes. In the edit, always prefer the conversational reads over the scripted-sounding ones.

THE SCRIPT

“I used to waste money sending my products out to influencers, and them never giving me any content. I used to spend money and hours booking an Airbnb to go and promote my product, and it ended up just getting no views. I spent countless hours recording videos for my brand, and it ended up not even doing me any justice. The same content that used to take me hours and days to make, I'm able to make in seconds using AI. And keep in mind — I'm only one person. I don't have a full team around me helping me. It's just me and AI.”

7. The Real Problem — A System, Not a Product

● EDIT FIX — solvable at the desk, no new filming

THE PSYCHOLOGY

This is problem redefinition, the pivot of the whole script. The viewer walked in thinking they need a winning product or a viral video; the script tells them the real miss was a system. That reframe does two jobs at once: it explains their past failure (absolution again — “this part isn't even your fault”), and it defines the category of the solution before the offer appears — so when Ecom Essentials shows up, it is the only thing on the table shaped like the answer.

THE FIX

Audio says “costing you to miss out” — leave the audio, but caption it as “causing.” No pickup needed.

THE SCRIPT

“The problem was I was looking for another winning product, or a viral piece of content — but that was never it. Even when I started to get a little bit of sales, the one thing I was actually missing was a real system. And this is the part that isn't even your fault. There's a lot of people giving information and game about e-commerce, but nobody's actually showing you how to scale. There's so much contradicting information out there, you probably don't know where to start — and that's the very thing that's causing you to miss out on this opportunity right now.”

8. The AI Window — Opportunity, Not Pressure

● KEEP — strongest recorded takes, use as is

THE PSYCHOLOGY

FOMO only works when it's plausible. “Everyone will figure this out soon” frames acting now as getting in early rather than being sold to — the viewer's self-image shifts from customer to insider, and people protect an insider identity with action. Pairing it with “the barrier to entry is almost free” removes the effort excuse in the same breath.

THE FIX

Use the final take of each line; trim the “walk somebody how” stumble with a cut.

THE SCRIPT

“AI is becoming more and more popular, and it's only so long before everybody starts to hop on this trend and figure out how people are actually running their businesses using AI. Even in the past, the barrier to entry to e-commerce was so small it was almost free — and AI made that even easier. What you're missing is the proper information and the proper AI systems — and that is the difference between me stuck at zero for two years, versus you doing this in a couple weeks to a couple months.”

9. The Four Mechanisms — The Framework

● EDIT FIX — solvable at the desk, no new filming

THE PSYCHOLOGY

A named framework converts a pitch into a lesson. The moment the viewer accepts the four-part model, they self-diagnose against it (“I have a store... but I don't have an engine”) — and a self-diagnosed gap is a gap the viewer wants filled. The framework also makes the later guru contrast feel earned: he has a system; they have hype.

THE FIX

Use the complete-ordering take only. On-screen graphics must read exactly 1. Offer 2. Storefront 3. Engine 4. Operations — a discarded first take opens with “content” and will contradict the graphics if it slips in.

THE SCRIPT

“These are the four mechanisms that build a real brand. First, you have the offer — the perceived value the customer has when they're viewing your product. You have your storefront — how people are actually purchasing and being converted into sales. You have the engine — the content and marketing being pushed out and targeted to your customers so they become aware of your product. And this is one of the key things that got me to the success I have right now — AI made this so much easier. I don't have to go out, record videos, or send my products to influencers and get no feedback. I'm doing all of this from behind my computer. And the last part is the operations — the inventory, the cash, the fulfillment, the manufacturers, and the suppliers.”

10. Differentiation — Guru Contrast & Storage-Unit Proof

● KEEP — strongest recorded takes, use as is

THE PSYCHOLOGY

He names the viewer's suspicion before the viewer does — fake results, dead stores, people who never ran a brand at all. Stealing the skeptic's script disarms it: there is nothing left for the viewer to silently object with. Then the storage unit: unfakeable, unglamorous proof-of-work. Gurus rent Lamborghinis; nobody rents a storage unit full of mirrors. The mundane detail is the credibility. This is the strongest material in the entire shoot.

THE FIX

This beat is where receipts live. Cut to real orders, real packing, real screens under the green line.

THE SCRIPT

“Most people tryna teach you e-com right now are showing you results for some quick store that they built up — and it died in a couple months. Some of them are claiming results they never even had. And some of them never really ran one at all. But what makes me different is I'm building one right now, and I've been documenting the whole journey since I started. I'm currently in my storage unit right now, where I'm managing all of my inventory and packing all of my orders. And I'm also scaling my business using AI ads. There's a lot I'm still automating — and I probably will be for a while, because this is something that's gonna last long term. And you get to watch me make these big calls and plays for my business as they're happening, in real time. Because you don't learn from a course — you learn from somebody who's actually doing what they say they do.”

11. The Offer — Ecom Essentials, Stacked to Escalate

● EDIT FIX — solvable at the desk, no new filming

THE PSYCHOLOGY

An offer stack works by escalation: each item should feel bigger than the last, ending on the thing only this seller can provide, because the last thing heard is the thing remembered. Dez's recorded order already does this correctly — access → audits → community → modules → his exact AI systems → open-book numbers. The two closers are the only items no competitor can copy; they are the purchase justification.

THE FIX

Keep his recorded order. Protect the final two beats in the edit at all costs — the open-book line is the single most differentiated claim in the video and it took six takes to land; use the last take.

THE SCRIPT

“And what I'm calling it is Ecom Essentials. This is where you get direct access to me, my private channel, my knowledge — where we come in your business and actually help you scale, figure out what's not working, and get you to that next level. We're looking at your content, your funnels, your website — everything — helping you side by side. You'll have a community of like-minded people to help you grow, and modules packed with information going over the four pillars you need to master to build your brand. And most importantly — this is where you get access to the different AI systems that I'm using in my business right now: the exact tools I use, the prompts I use to make these images and videos. That's the exact part that makes it possible to do this as only one person.”

“Plus — you get open-book access to my brand, Crib Essentials: real numbers, real mistakes, every single month. And that's something nobody else could give you, because nobody's actually doing it.”

12. Objection Handling — Face, Saturation, Past Failure

● PICKUP REQUIRED — new line(s) must be recorded

THE PSYCHOLOGY

Objection handling isn't persuasion — it's permission. Every answered objection removes an excuse the viewer was saving for the end of the video. The third objection ("I already tried and failed") is the most valuable one because it targets his exact avatar and converts their embarrassment into equity: "you already did the hard work" reframes a sunk cost as a head start. In the raw footage that thought cuts off mid-sentence in every take — as shot, the edit would have to drop his best objection entirely.

THE FIX

Objections 1 and 2 are fully in the can. Record the blue completion line below for objection 3.

THE SCRIPT

"And a couple quick answers to what you're thinking. You're probably like, 'I don't wanna be a designer. I don't wanna show my face.' Well — I didn't want to either. That was the number one thing AI helped solve for me, and it's the first thing we're gonna help you get set up."

"You may be thinking, 'Is e-commerce saturated?' E-commerce is not saturated, and it will be a thing forever. It's saturated with people guessing and trying to make quick money. It's not saturated with real people operating real businesses. I sell mirrors — mirrors have been a thing for thousands and thousands of years — but that didn't stop me from making tens of thousands of dollars from just mirrors alone."

"Or you may be thinking you already tried this and you failed — and that's actually the good thing. You already did most of the hard work. You're already one of the people who actually took action — most people never even build the store. You don't need to start over. You just needed the system, and that's exactly what we hand you."

13. Qualify + CTA — The Take-Away Close

● PICKUP REQUIRED — new line(s) must be recorded

THE PSYCHOLOGY

Disqualifying the get-rich-quick viewer ("store by tonight, ten grand by Friday — I'm not the person") raises the offer's status: scarcity by standards, not countdown timers, and the serious viewer leans in to prove they qualify. But a call-booking CTA still needs a reason to act today, or "I'll do it later" wins by default. The footage contains zero urgency — the blue line below adds honest capacity scarcity that fits his operator positioning perfectly, because it's literally true.

THE FIX

Record the blue urgency line; deliver the red CTA at full energy and end the video there — no new information after the ask.

THE SCRIPT

“If you want a store by tonight and ten grand by Friday — I’m not the person to work with. But if you’re trying to build a business long term, using AI to actually help you scale — then listen. I pack every order out of this storage unit myself. I only take a handful of calls a week — that’s it — because I’m running a real brand, not a call center.”

“If you're serious, the application is below. Book a call, and we'll see you there.”

Pickup Session — Exact Shot List

One sitting, roughly 15–20 minutes. Same storage-unit location, same outfit as the main shoot for continuity. Four lines total:

1 New hook (record 2–3 takes)

I run a [FINAL CLAIM] e-commerce brand out of this storage unit — and my entire marketing team is AI. Two years ago, I was stuck at zero, guessing just like everybody else. And the gap between those two versions of me is exactly what this video is about.

2 Objection 3 completion

You're already one of the people who actually took action — most people never even build the store. You don't need to start over. You just needed the system, and that's exactly what we hand you.

3 Urgency line (before CTA)

Then listen. I pack every order out of this storage unit myself. I only take a handful of calls a week — that's it — because I'm running a real brand, not a call center.

4 CTA re-record (optional, only if energy on existing take feels low in the cut)

If you're serious, the application is below. Book a call, and we'll see you there.

Pre-Publish Checklist

- [] Claims locked: ONE verified revenue claim set, identical in every yellow spot (audio + on-screen text). Dez can screenshot every number said.
- [] Receipts placed under both green moments (Concept 4 intro, Concept 10 storage unit).
- [] Four-mechanism graphics read exactly: Offer / Storefront / Engine / Operations.
- [] Captions corrected: “costing” → “causing”; “a actual” → “an actual” (captions only, audio untouched).
- [] Outtake at the tail of the raw file removed.
- [] No content after the final CTA.
